

Acknowledgement

With this fourth issue of Volume 2 (2006), Postcolonial Text has become a quarterly journal, and we look forward to continuing to publish at the same pace into the future. At this time, we wish to thank the journal's editors and the current members of the Editorial Board who have lent their support over the past three years, including Tabish Khair, who is stepping down from the Poetry and Fiction section. We are fortunate to have acquired the assistance of Sharanya Jayawickrama as Associate Managing Editor, who also undertook the layout of many of the pieces in this issue. We continue to benefit from the support of the Public Knowledge Project, which has developed the publishing software Open Journal Systems that this journal uses to publish in this open access format at no cost to its readers. With the continuing interest of a growing readership, the journal shows that it is fulfilling its intention of disseminating knowledge to a wide and varied global audience. All in all, we express our appreciation of the authors, reviewers, editors, copyeditors and proofreaders who freely commit their time, energy, and critical intelligence to advancing the idea of a postcolonial text as part of the global circulation of knowledge, which continues to be deeply satisfying, we sincerely hope, for all involved.
